As a visual-oriented person, I prefer using the GUI interface, and it's what my previous/current jobs had me constantly using as well in the company servers. Everyone (for the most part) is well versed, and I picked up some things from work that I now use for my own organization. For example, I always have file extensions turned on since I'm often working with JPGs and PNGs, and I like to use the preview option in file explorer in order to quickly look at images before opening them in Photoshop or other software. I can see the speed in the Command-land being useful for finding something quickly, but I usually deal with multiple copies of an image (ex Version 1, Version 2, etc), so GUI is much more convenient.
